SUDDEN DEATH TAKES TOLL

C. WM. TROXELL, A YOUNG BANKER, OF THIS TOWN.

Well Known Citizens Who Have Reached Advanced Ages Pass Away.

C. William Troxell, the courteous bookkeeper of the Citizens' Trust Company, whose welcome, cheerful greeting met every patron and visitor of the bank immediately after entering the bank building, passed away suddenly Monday night at the Jefferson Hospital, Philadelphia. He had a host of friends in the town and county who were shocked when they learned of his death, as it was not known that his condition had been growing so serious that the inevitable might have to be suddenly faced. He had been on duty regularly at the bank up to Monday of last week. Several years ago there had been some fear of breaking health but he recovered and his many friends did not anticipate an early termination to his life. Diabetes had taken a grip upon him and on Monday the great toe of a foot showed a condition that meant blood poisoning.

On the early train Monday morning Dr. J. P. Dalbey took Mr. Troxell to Philadelphia, accompanied by his wife, and a consultation was held with Prof. J. Chalmers Da Costa at the Jefferson Hospital and no hope could be held out that an operation would be beneficial. His condition became worse on the way to the city by reason of heart trouble and Monday evening at 10.30 he passed away, aged 47 years, 5 months and 19 days. He was born in Dayton, Ohio, a son of Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Troxell, and his mother dying when he was about a year old, was brought to his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Troxell of this place and reared by them and spent his entire life here. He attended the schools of this place and was the clerk at the Eagle Hotel for many years. He acquired a talent for remembering names and faces and his hearty greeting gave a warm welcome to the guests of the hotel and this characteristic was carried by him into his new work when he accepted a position with the Citizens' Trust Company of Gettysburg twelve years ago, and he soon became one of the valuable officials of the new institution.

Mr. Troxell was prominent in Masonic circles and was a member of Good Samaritan Lodge, No. 336 F. and A. M., this place, and of Good Samaritan Chapter, No. 266, and also a past eminent commander of Gettysburg Commandery No. 79. Mr. Troxell was a past master of the lodge and past high priest of the chapter. The funeral was held on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and was in charge of the Masonic Order of the town, with interment in the Evergreen Cemetery.

He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Margaret Redding, a daughter of Joseph Redding of Steinwehr avenue, and a son, William Troxell, a member of the Freshman Class of Gettysburg College. He is also survived by his father, S. A. Troxell, of Dayton, Ohio, and three step-brothers living in Ohio.

Mrs. Louisa F. Cox, one of the oldest residents of the town, and the last of the Fahnstock family, died at the home of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Sallie Cox, Baltimore street, on last Saturday. On the preceding Sunday she had suffered a stroke of apoplexy. Her son, James Brady Cox, of Chicago, was sent for and upon his arrival Mrs. Cox had recovered to an extent, but then gradually failed. She was in her 92nd year. Her maiden name was Louise Catherine Fahnstock, a daughter of Samuel and Susan Baugher Fahnstock and was born near Abbotstown. Soon after her birth the family moved to Gettysburg, where she resided until her marriage to Dr. John A. Cox of Lancaster. After the marriage they lived in Reading and Philadelphia and upon the death of her husband in 1865, returned to Gettysburg, making her home with her daughter-in-law. The funeral was held on Monday afternoon with interment in the Evergreen Cemetery. She outlived five of her six sons, the remaining one being James Brady Cox of Chicago.

Mrs. Matilda Palmer ended her life by hanging herself in the barn at the home of her grandson, Chas. McCadden, Straban township, a mile and a half from Hunterstown, last Sunday evening. The discovery of the body was made by Charles McCadden. The family had been attending the funeral of Mrs. Miller during the afternoon and left Mrs. Palmer at home alone. As soon as they returned Mr. McCadden went to the barn to do his evening's work and upon entering ran against the body of the woman in the dark hanging in the entry. There were no signs that the woman had struggled and it is believed death was instantaneous. Mrs. Palmer was 72 years old. She had been sick about two weeks ago and since then was in a melancholy state of mind. She said several times that she would end her life, and thinking she might commit suicide in her despondency, the family kept a close watch over her. However, she seemed to improve and maintained the best of spirits. When the family left for the Miller's home she seemed to be in a happy mood and apparently free of any melancholy frame of mind. They went away shortly after dinner and it is thought she went to the barn about the middle of the afternoon. She used part of a rope off a hay fork. Upon finding the body, Dr. Lech of Hampton, was notified, and considered it unnecessary to hold an inquest.

Mrs. Palmer was a widow for 35 years and made her home recently with her grandson, Charles McCadden, who is a farmer. She is survived by three children, Mrs. L. B. McCadden, of near Hunterstown, Edward Palmer of Hanover, and Harry E. Palmer of White Hall. Four brothers also survive, Samuel Witter of Columbus, Ohio, Jacob Witter of Boiling Springs, Harry Witter of Harrisburg, and Edward Witter of Cumberland county. The funeral was on Thursday, and interment at New Chester Reformed Church, Rev. Irwin S. Ditzler of Spring Grove, officiating.

For many years Mr. Moritz conducted the tavern at Fairplay, in the days when stage coaches were the only means of travel and this hostelry was known as "Moritz's Tavern" and did a prosperous business. Mr. Moritz continued with the tavern business until 1876. Later he went into business with Joseph S. Felix, conducting the general store at Fairplay and remained in that business for 10 years. He followed the occupation of farming for many years afterward. Mr. Moritz was widely known and his knowledge of occurrences during the days when Moritz's Tavern was enjoying a flourishing business with stage coach traffic, made him an interesting talker. He delighted to relate his experiences and the customs of those days and was a center of many social gatherings of the neighborhood, at which he recounted the interesting life and happenings of those days. Mr. Moritz was a Republican in politics. He is survived by his widow and one daughter, Miss Kate Moritz, living at home. The funeral was on Thursday, the Rev. Mr. Higbee, Emmitsburg, officiating. The annual banquet was held on Tuesday evening at the Bolton House. The guest of honor was Governor M. G. Brumbaugh, and he gave an earnest and determined talk to the newspaper men; he declared there was only one side to a moral issue and that it was the duty of the press to be on the side against intemperance and the issues growing out of the same. He appealed to the press of the State to support him and stand by him in his fight for the local option bill on county unity plan, giving the people the right to dictate how their own communities should be run, with or without the saloon. He said this question ought not to be in politics and should not have a part in determining the selection of judges but should be in the hands of all the people to decide. He appealed for the creation of a public sentiment for the stand he had taken and that he proposed to do everything in his power to secure a local option law. ## License Transfer Asked For.

An application for the transfer of the liquor license at the Willard Hotel, Littlestown, from John D. Mayers to his step-son, Hugh C. Hinkle, was filed in the office of the Clerk of the Court this week. At the license court this year exceptions were filed to granting license to Mr. Mayers on the ground that there were only three signers on his certificate not on any other paper in Littlestown. Constable Gouter of the same place made a special report alleging that liquor had been sold on Sunday and there had been throwing of dice for the drunks and chancing off of articles at hotel. The Grand Jury found an indictment at the January court charging selling liquor on Sunday. In granting the license the court warned if the charges were true the license would be revoked. The charges were to be investigated at the April court. Whether the application for transfer of license is an anticipating move does not appear by the papers. Hugh C. Hinkle has been working for several years on a Philadelphia paper. He was admitted to the Adams County Bar years ago and conducted the "Jeffersonian" of Littlestown for some years. Mr. Hinkle is a son of Mrs. Mayers who owns the Willard Hotel.

AN ADAMS COUNTY BOY

HAS TO HIS CREDIT FINEST
BOOK-MAKING WORK OF ART.Chinese Porcelains is Title of Book
Elaborately Illustrating in Color
the Morgan Collection.

The highest achievement which has been attained in the art of book-making in this country is the work of an Adams County boy, Robert Grier Cooke, a grandson of the late Dr. Marsden of York Springs. The book of the most exquisite workmanship yet done in America is the Catalogue de Luxe entitled "Chinese Porcelains," issued by the late J. P. Morgan. Dr. Frederick Hirth in the Bulletin of the Metropolitan Museum of art said of the book:

"Here is a book which in a German public library would be kept in a glass case in a room especially set aside for the exhibition of book treasures among the rare old prints of the Middle Ages. It is quite a new book it is true, but the many illustrations adorning it are a triumph of the latest development of reproductive art and may vie with the most delicate handiwork of the monastic rubricators. Altogether this valuable catalogue is a worthy counterpart of one of the finest collections in the world."

Other discriminating critics have paid similar tribute to the design and workmanship of the Morgan catalogue. And the way in which it was brought into being is a story of more than usual interest. Also it is a story of the way an enterprising young American can perceive and lay hold of an unusual opportunity and stick to it until it is finished. The New York Sun in a recent issue tells the story of the creation of the wonderful value in part as follows:

The young American in this particular instance is Robert Grier Cooke, now president of the Fifth Avenue Association. In 1902 and 1903 he was starting in business as a publisher of beautiful books. For a time everything went along satisfactorily, and then he came down with typhoid fever. At the end of a couple of months he got around on his feet and started out to find a new book or two that some one wanted to have made.

After seeing several people he went to call on the late W. M. Laffan, then of THE SUN, thinking that perhaps he might know of an opportunity. This was early in the year 1908. Mr. Laffan listened and then said:

"Waldo Newcomer, in Baltimore, wants a memorial book made for his father. Write him. He gives you the contract for making the book and you make it satisfactorily. I'll put you in the way of doing something much more important."

That was enough for Mr. Cooke. He got into touch with Mr. Newcomer, and in four or five months the memorial volume was finished.

"I notified Mr. Laffan that it was completed," Mr. Cooke said the other day when telling of the experience, "but didn't see him for weeks afterward when he happened to be lunching at a downtown club. He saw me at the same time and said: 'Sit down. I want to talk to you.'"

"Can you reproduce Chinese porcelains?" "I looked at him in silence, wondering what he meant. I didn't know anything about porcelains, Chinese or other; but Mr. Laffan evidently took it for granted that I knew something about them, for he at once continued: 'Would you reproduce them in the three color process or by lithograph?' I looked at him again in dumb astonishment. Then he evidently grasped the situation so far as my ignorance of the subject was concerned, for he turned to me and said with his usual directness: 'You go and study the matter and come back and report to me.'

"As I was about to leave he added that Mr. Morgan was going to make a catalogue of his Chinese porcelains and thought it would have to be made abroad, as he was by no means sure that such a book as he wanted could be produced in America. Yet he hesitated to have it done in Europe, for that would mean packing and shipping his priceless porcelains abroad and unpacking them there while each was being measured, studied and reproduced in color. Then they would have to be repacked, reshipped to New York, transferred to the Metropolitan Museum, and there unpacked again and replaced in their cases. The risk was great of breakage, and Mr. Morgan wished to avoid it if possible.

"I went out from that luncheon club," Mr. Cooke continued, and hurried up to my office to write letters summoning there all the specialists in color printing that I could get hold of in the United States. So far as I could ascertain the only catalogue approaching this project of Mr. Morgan's was the well known Walters catalogue, which took ten years in the making and cost a quarter of a million dollars to complete.

"Conference after conference was held with color men who came here from many places, each of whom was eagerly alive to the opportunity. Meanwhile I was going around through the publishing houses asking every man I knew if he could recommend some one specialist who would give up his entire time and thought to supervising the manufacture of the book. Several times a man already in the publishing business offered to do the work, but when I asked how difficult it would be each one said there would be no difficulty whatever; that it was only necessary to use care. This showed, of course, that they did not understand anything about the real scope of the task or how delicately and accurately the marvellous porcelains would have to be treated.

"I decided that I would have to be my own supervisor and get along without a man of technical skill to look after all details. The next step was to find a man who could personally take charge of the mechanical work of reproducing those porcelains in the shape of color plates. Finally after some weeks of search I discovered a Frenchman of artistic talent who had done excellent lithographic color work on his own account and decided that he was the one to do this mechanical work for the catalogue. This, of course, after many talks with him and careful examination of his work. Then I went down to THE SUN office and said to Mr. Laffan: 'I'm ready to go ahead on the Morgan catalogue. I think we can reproduce the porcelains satisfactorily.'

"Mr. Laffan demurred. He was afraid of the indefiniteness of the statement. Finally he suggested that I take a vase from his own collection and show him what could be done with it. So I took a vase from his residence, transferred it to the Frenchman's shop, and he set to work on it.

"During the next three months I spent most of my waking hours and a good many hours which should have been given to sleep down in that little shop. Then came a day when I carried finished plates in full color to Mr. Laffan. At first he said little, but some days afterward he said he had shown the plates to Mr. Morgan, who had expressed himself as satisfied with the experiment. Then Mr. Laffan told me to go ahead and make my business proposition in writing as to the cost of the proposed catalogue and the estimated time needed to complete it.

"Sometimes," Mr. Cooke continued with a smile, "it fairly frightens me now to think of handling those priceless porcelains, many individual pieces of which are worth thousands upon thousands of dollars, although of course I took every possible precaution against loss or injury. At any rate my proposition was submitted, and then the actual work began in earnest.

"First of all, after making a contract with the Frenchman I had to decide on kind and quality of paper for the text. Mr. Laffan was writing as well as the paper to be used in illustrating the catalogue; this paper had to be ordered and also the silk and the levant for the covers. Meanwhile it was necessary for the Frenchman to get under way, for his was by all means the most difficult part of the enterprise. I took him up to the museum, where he could see the variety and colors of the vases and ascertain experimentally whether he could use with their delicate tones a secret chemical process he had for the treatment of inks making for durability of color as well as brilliance of tone effects.

"He found that he could use his secret chemical process, and as soon as possible set up a private establishment with twelve expert color men selected by himself who were to be solely engaged for two years or so on the Morgan catalogue.

"Before he could do anything more than study the porcelains up in the museum, however, a very important initial step had to be taken, that of making photographs of each piece. The method was this. I arranged with a photographer and to his gallery sent one after another of the rare objects, moving at one time from five or six to a dozen, and after he had made several exposures of each the porcelains were taken to the Frenchman's workrooms. One day I had at the gallery the famous Hawthorn vase, valued at $100,000, and from there it went to the Frenchman's color studio.

"There he would take the photograph and stand it up before a workman, and near by place the original; and then would commence the task of transferring each color found in the original to the lithographic stone. I spent several days each week there studying the work as it progressed and criticising as closely as I could.

"Before many months passed trouble commenced. I called attention to certain high lights in the original porcelains which in several instances were not reproduced with exactness in the plates. The Frenchman admitted that his reproduction was too dull and for weeks tried to remedy it. Finally, however, he had to confess that it could not be done.

"But I knew better. It simply had to be done, otherwise this particular Morgan catalogue would never be issued. Mr. Laffan with his wonderful knowledge of ceramics would not recognize the absence of brilliancy in these high lights. Mr. Morgan undoubtedly would do the same; and personally I would not dream of having a single plate go out with the least defect.

"This was the worst work of the kind ever attempted in the United States, and Mr. Morgan himself had been in grave doubt as to whether an American skill could achieve results equal to those in Europe. As a consequence it was imperative that some method be found to treat the high lights. The Frenchman said it could only be accomplished by use of some varnish in the inks that he could not find and which he did not know had ever existed. He had come to a dead end.

"There was only one thing to do, and I started on a search through the city, and kept on hunting until I found a varnish which, when tried, did the trick.

"The introductory text to the catalogue—modestly entitled 'Notes' by Mr. Laffan, although really constituting an erudite historical essay on the art of making porcelains by the Chinese, especially during the past twenty-five centuries—this introductory text was under way; and also the catalogue list of some eleven or twelve hundred pieces, which was being made by George Benthams. So far as I could see everything was progressing satisfactorily when during the second summer I went up to Newport to take a much needed rest.

"Porcelain after porcelain had been taken from the Metropolitan Museum to the photograph gallery, then to the color studio, and from there lithograph stones had been sent to a specialist far down town who was to do the color printing. Proof after proof had been submitted to Mr. Laffan, and by him to Mr. Morgan in many instances, and I had received criticism as keen as it was frequent for making one change or another in some delicate detail.

"But now everything was in splendid shape. The color lithographs practically completed, ready to be bound into the pages. I had negotiated with ten binders, and one of them—the one I selected—not far from Boston, was ready to start on his part of the undertaking. The crushed levant for covers had been selected in Paris and the skins were already in this country, while the special paper with my private watermark had already been manufactured in Rives, France.

"Under the circumstances I felt justified in leaving the work long enough to take a breathing spell, and went off. I hadn't been in Newport but a day, however, when a long distance telephone came from the color printer which in substance said that I should come to New York at once, that three-quarters of the finished plates were ruined in the drying room.

"As may be imagined," Mr. Cooke continued, "I wasted no time in starting off from Newport; and on the way down to New York I nudged my brains to try and find a way out of the difficulty. If three-quarters of the finished color plates had been seriously injured, there was nothing to be done, so far as I could see, but to begin all over again, just where we had commenced nearly two years before, and transport all of the porcelains again from the Museum of Art to the photograph gallery, and then to the Frenchman's studio.

"You can appreciate the seriousness of the situation when you know that as soon as 250 copies of a single plate had been printed the lithographing stone was destroyed, this being a condition made by Mr. Morgan, who did not wish to run the risk of having extra copies of the catalogue made by any unauthorized person. His instructions had been carried out to the letter, of course; and here we were with the color printing done, the stones completely destroyed—and a telephone message announcing that three-quarters of the printed plates were ruined!

"It wasn't a pleasant journey, that from Newport to New York; but my relief was great when I arrived at the color printer's establishment and after examining the sheets saw a way in which they could be restored. The printer was a conscientious man as well as a first class man of business. He had worked so incessantly over the printing and had followed each detail with such constant care that when some of the sheets hanging up to dry had brushed together in a breeze he feared the whole lot had been irredeemably damaged. Realizing his responsibility in this work of extraordinary importance, which might make secure the reputation of a master printer if successful, he involuntarily exaggerated the injury done those sheets and had hurried up to Newport the telephone message which brought me hurrying back.

"One day some two years after I started on the undertaking I carried two finished copies of the catalogue of Chinese porcelains down to Mr. Morgan's office, where Mr. Laffan was waiting by appointment. I handed the books to Mr. Laffan, who took them to Mr. Morgan, and then for an hour I sat down and waited. Naturally, I wondered what the verdict would be, but I wasn't specially worried. I had by no means sure that any one else could have accomplished much more. So I simply sat there and waited and waited.

"Then Mr. Laffan came out of Mr. Morgan's office smiling—you see he had recommended me to Mr. Morgan as being competent to carry through the work. And when I rose to meet him he said, 'Mr. Morgan is very much pleased.' That was all; but it was enough.

"As already mentioned, the catalogue of Chinese porcelains was bound in crushed levant with narrow gold tooling at a total cost of less than $50,000. Of the 250 copies printed 200 were bound in a dark green, 25 in deep red and 25 in the royal yellow. Color work lithograph stones, type and all else was destroyed as soon as the limit of edition was finished. Mr. Morgan presented the books to libraries, museums and personal friends throughout the world. More than seventy years in many colors are included in the catalogue, printed on hand made French paper, which is a royal grade de luxe water marked and double edged, and is superbly bound. The plates are of heavy 1/16 more nearly the leather of the bindings, and the front and back fly-leaf are crushed leather of the same color, exactly matching the covers. The binding is a masterpiece of bookbinding.

"To give instructions to the designer Mr. Morgan had the size of the book, the name, even though it would contain large pictures of the porcelains. What he desired was a book that could be held easily in one's hands, and not so large that it would have to be spread open on a table. A person really interested in studying the porcelains pictured and described therein could do so without fatigue or inconvenience. This suggestion of practical utility was also carried out. The title page reads as follows:

of
CHINESE PORCELAINS
Privately printed by order of
Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan.
New York
MCMIV.

On the inside of a leaf is the copyright taken out in Mr. Cooke's name, and his initials, "R. G. C.," are watermarked in the paper. By Mr. Morgan's direction two copies of the catalogue were sent to Mr. Cooke, one of which he still has. The other was stolen from his safe. An interesting incident in connection with the catalogue occurred when at Mr. Morgan's direction two copies were formally presented by Mr. Cooke to the Chinese High Commissioners then visiting the United States. One was for the commissioners, and they were requested to present the other copy to the Empress Dowager.

"I was assured that the commissioners received both copies," Mr. Cooke said in recalling the occurrence, "but for a long time no acknowledgment was forthcoming. I thought this very strange, but attributed it merely to accident or oversight, until long afterward when I learned that the Dowager Empress was so greatly delighted with her own copy that she asked whether it would be possible to obtain a second one. Somebody told her that the high Commissioners had a second copy, and she promptly sent for it and presented it to the late Emperor."

After Mr. Morgan had examined several copies of the catalogue he sent Mr. Cooke a letter of approval and congratulation, which meant much to the recipient.

Rev. W. W. Hartman Honored.

The Fourth Quarterly Conference of the First Methodist Episcopal Church was held last evening with twenty-seven members present. The reports from the various departments and societies of the Church showed the affairs to be in excellent shape, there having been a number of accessions to the membership of the church and the contributions for current expenses and benevolence exceeded the amount of the preceding year making one of the best records in the history of the church.

A. A. Stevens presented a resolution which was seconded by W. A. Bouse and unanimously adopted by a rising vote, recommending the pastor, Rev. W. W. Hartman, to the presiding bishop of the Central Pennsylvania Conference and his cabinet as one well qualified for the office of District Superintendent and respectfully and sincerely requesting his appointment.

The action of the Quarterly Conference came as a complete surprise to the pastor and is a deserved tribute to Rev. Mr. Hartman after four years of faithful and successful service as pastor of the local church. The expiration of the time limit makes two vacancies in the district superintendency to be filled by the bishop at the approaching conference session, and though Mr. Hartman does not seek the office the action of his friends places his "hat in the ring."—Tyrone Daily Herald.

Life Guards.

The Life Guards are two regiments of cavalry forming part of the British household troops. They are gallant soldiers, and every loyal British heart is proud of them. Not only the King's household, but yours, ours, everybody's should have its life guards.

The need of them is especially great when the greatest foes of life, diseases, find allies in the very elements as colds, influenza, catarrh, the grip, and pneumonia do in the stormy month of March. The best way that we know of to guard against these diseases is to strengthen the system with Hood's Sarsaparilla—the greatest of all life guards. It removes the conditions in which these diseases make their most successful attack, gives vigor and tone to all the vital organs and functions, and imparts a genial warmth to the blood. Remember the weaker the system the greater the exposure to disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the system strong.

LOCAL OPTION SITUATION.

Governor Brumbaugh has taken a determined stand for a county unit local option bill. In the fight for such a bill a large majority of the people of Adams county are on the side of Governor Brumbaugh. This was evident when the result of the primaries of 1914 became known and the candidates of the three parties standing for local option had won out. For months well informed citizens of the county have openly expressed their opinion that all through Adams county there is a decided opinion in favor of a county unit local option law and many times the declaration has been heard that the county will go dry by a good big majority as soon as the people are given the right to decide the matter. The position of the Democratic party last year is right beyond all dispute. The people should decide the question of wet or dry. It should not be dragged into judicial contests and other political campaigns. The bill of Governor Brumbaugh provides for special elections at which the question can be determined for the whole county and so separate the decisions from all other issues and candidates.

Governor Brumbaugh last week appealed to Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, the National Democratic Committee-man from Pennsylvania, as follows: "Will you personally appeal to every member of our Legislature to redeem your party pledge by voting for local option. If so, it will win. I appeal to you to do this service for Pennsylvania."

Mr. Palmer's reply to the Governor read:

"Your telegram received. I shall be very glad to personally urge every Democratic member of the Legislature to redeem our party's pledge and vote for local option. county unit Local option, self-government and home rule are fundamental principles of our government. The people of Pennsylvania are for local option by a large majority, and their will should prevail. Wish you success in your fight to give the people the right in each county to determine for themselves this important question."

The Democratic platform last year declared unequivocally in favor of local option, that was the issue determined at the primary by the people and it is the duty of Democratic Senators and Assemblymen to vote for Governor Brumbaugh's local option bill. An opportunity is presented to the Democratic party of this State such as seldom arises. As William Jennings Bryan has said, the party took a high stand last year on the greatest moral issue since the Civil War and this stand should be maintained and indicate to the people that the Democratic party is the one to which the people must look for relief.

Do You Know that Railroad Expansion Makes Work and Stimulates Industry?

Money saved by the railroads flows back to the people. The $2,000,000 paid annually by the railroads of Pennsylvania and New Jersey to unnecessary trainmen, forced upon them by the Full Crew—or "excess man crew"—Laws, deprives the people of the big benefits and advantages this money, properly expended, would bring.

Because the efficient development of the railway industry in these States is so materially identified with the prosperity of the farmer, business man, working man, and scores of more or less affiliated industries, the railroads ask the people to help them save this huge amount—now absolutely wasted—that it may go to useful purposes and work toward restoration of general prosperity.

This $2,000,000 spent for 80 locomotives, for example, would make one year's work for 1745 men, as follows:

In the locomotive shops .....	894
In the various processes of producing the 29,200,000 pounds of material going into these locomotives, 851 men would get employment as follows:
In steel mills .....	206
In blast furnaces .....	45
In iron mines .....	140
In coal and coke production .....	60
In other work .....	400

Wages for all these men would amount to $1,750,000. This wage money going into circulation would make work in hundreds of other directions.

Railroad development bears upon all industries. It affects hundreds of businesses, thousands of individuals. Under normal conditions, the railroads constitute a great constructive force. Increasing their facilities and improving their systems results in stimulating all industry and business and automatically creates work for innumerable persons in many occupations.

Increased industrial activity swells passenger and freight traffic. This means more trains and real work for additional crews. In turn, it necessitates more locomotives and cars, increased equipment, erection of new and remodeling of old stations, reduction of grades and curves, elimination of grade crossings, construction of sidings in producing territories, increased passenger and freight terminal facilities.

The welfare of the people and the prosperity of the railroads are closely linked. The railroads find their prosperity in the general welfare. They seek not to decrease, but to increase, employment.

Communicate in person, by letter, or otherwise—TODAY—with your elected representatives at Harrisburg and Trenton. Ask them to repeal the Full Crew Laws. Call attention to the fact that, of 282 editorials received to date, 229 urge the repeal of the laws.

Let all get together to start the wheels of industry turning—to open wide the doors to prosperity.

Pretty Expensive Steak.

The highest known price ever paid for beefsteak was at Circle City, Alaska, a town that sprang up almost in the night during the Klondike gold excitement. The first steak to reach there sold for $18 a pound. It was a ten pound steak and was sent from a point fifty miles away. It was placed on exhibition and was such a curiosity that all the miners turned out in a body to see it.

Of course every one wanted a piece of the precious meat, and the prices offered might have resulted in a general rioting had not some one thought of raffling the steak for the benefit of a hospital which a bishop was trying to establish for the miners at Circle City. Bids started at $5 a pound and rose quickly to $35. At last, in order to avoid possible trouble, it was decided to sell tickets at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2.50 for the privilege of drawing a slice. After $400 worth of tickets had been sold the drawing began, and to the relief of those in charge of the enterprise no serious consequences resulted.—Detroit Free Press.

Read Your Books Again.

Let me implore any reader who has a fairly large library of his own and is honestly anxious to know what his books contain to devote some period of leisure to go through these volumes. shelf by shelf, as they stand, to learn which of them he can remember well, which are half read or unread. What pleasure and profit he would find in recalling the poetry he once so enjoyed or in turning to such essays as he had hitherto overlooked. He would find, I am sure, that the very things he long wanted to know, the poetry that had almost faded from his memory, the bursts of eloquence and prophecy that had stirred his youth, now grown dim in his mind as "an ancient tale, although the words were strong." All this had stood silent and unnoticed on his walls for years and years, while he had been stuffing himself with the most short story, the lives of royal maudlin women or it may be an article in a magazine.—Frederic Harrison.

Germes and All.

A Louisville woman who is somewhat of a crank on hygiene and who brings up her small daughter according to the latest methods took the child on a day train to a nearby little town. The mother sighed as she glanced at the dusty velvet seat and cloudy windows. The youngster, however, folded her manicured fingers in her white pique lap and apparently tried to absorb as little dirt as possible. Looking up from her magazine, the immaculate parent was horrified to find the small daughter's jaws working violently. "What have you in your mouth?" she demanded at once. "Gum," said the child. "Where did you get it?" gasped the mother. "The child pointed to a clean, round spot on the grimy window sill. "There," she said.—Louisville Times

Cost of a Horse.

It costs on an average $104.06 to raise a horse to the age of three years on the farms of Indiana and those of other states. This price has been carefully figured by experts of the department of agriculture, who based their figures on those furnished by 10,000 correspondents scattered throughout the country.

New Mexico can raise horses cheaper than the other states, or at an average price of $69.50. In Massachusetts the raising of colts is more expensive than in any other state, the average horse at three years representing an investment of $141.80.

Not to Be Repeated.

Shakespeare's contention that "there was never a philosopher who could endure the toothache patiently" was disproved by Canon Liddon. After an experience that would have closed the mouths of most of us, Liddon found it possible to write to a friend: "I have been quite laid up with trouble with my few remaining teeth, of which I had five taken out the day before yesterday. As only four remain, this particular experience cannot be repeated in this present life." This is a classic instance of the triumph of philosophy over pain.—London Globe.

The Atlantic Coast.

The eastern edge of the North American continent is overflowed by the sea, and that is why the water near the coast is so shallow. To find the true edge of the great continental land mass one would have to travel some thing like eighty miles due eastward from New York.

Lincoln's Rules of Life.

I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true; I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to the light that I have. I must stand with anybody who stands right—stand with him while he is right and part from him when he goes wrong.—A. Lincoln.
